

CONESTOGA CAMPGROUND
WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, MONTANA

Resort owners Gordon and Sally Stewart serve up a popular ice-cream social twice a week. Guests at this Montana Coast Deluxe resort have been known to extend their stays for that event alone

Even Gordon Stewart seems surprised at how wonderful it's been. Since he and his wife, Sally, bought Conestoga Campground, they've truly made it their own. As RVers themselves for 35 years, they developed strong ideas about how a campground should be run. With their practical experiences and management expertise, the Stewarts have made Conestoga Campground a home away from home.

So what does that mean for Coast to Coast members? It means that Gordon and Sally treat everyone the way they'd personally like to be treated. You can't ask for more than that.

Gordon and Sally have been busy fixing things up since they bought Conestoga. Their focus is on their guests, which means if it's a choice between making a guest happy or mowing the grass, their guests win every time. It's a "people first" policy that's resulted in many guests signing up to be full-time members instead of just visitors.

Conestoga Campground is a peaceful, pretty place nestled in the Smith River Valley, surrounded by the Big Belt, Little Belt and Castle mountain ranges and situated halfway between Glacier and Yellowstone national parks. Guests can enjoy the sportsmen's life or just watch it from poolside, campfire-side or while enjoying activities in the recreation hall.

This is Big Sky country, so expect sweeping plains, endless national forests, hiking, hunting, riding and natural hot springs. Visit the Castle Museum for Montana Victoriana or the Bair Family Museum for a sample of the state's sheep and cattle ranching heyday. Whatever you choose, come back again—the Stewarts will welcome you and dish up some ice cream.
